Sitac

Exhausted by the fighting, both sides are joining the negotiating table under pressure from NATO, which threatens the belligerents with harsh sanctions. The end of the conflict is only a matter of the day and the military commands of the two countries launch their last forces in order to obtain a favourable position for the negotiations.

The bluefor command has received a crucial information: a defector is on vacation on the island of Imrali. This penny is a key figure in the direction of operations within private military companies in connection with the enemy. Its elimination will considerably weaken the clandestine military policy of redfor, forcing it to withdraw from certain hot spots.

Besides the defector, the island of Imrali has a military port that is vital for logistics within the Aegean Sea. Its possession would enable the belligerents to secure an even stronger hold on the Aegean Sea. The bluefor command made the decision to launch an amphibious operation to eliminate the defector and to seize the military installations of the island to take short the troops redfor stationed on the spot.
